Letter from Texas.

[Correspondence of the Alexandria Gazette.] AUSTIN CITY, Texas, Aug. 11.—Casualty I opened the topic of cultivating what Southern staple, cotton, in my letter of 8th inst. to your intelligent readers. A few words in addition I hope may be considered appropos.
Hitherto there has been but a spare supply of white labor, owing to a great measure to the fact that slavery was cherished as the peculiar institution of the South, but now that this great change has been effected and although the price paid in blood and treasure has been exorbitant, yet white labor has no longer this hitherto insurmountable obstacle to contend with. This has been the serious stumbling block with the many European immigrants.
It is characteristic of the Anglo saxon race, particularly, as soon as they become acquainted with the institutions of our country, to enter into business on their own account.
An ordinary hand can easily cultivate fifteen acres of cotton and five of corn. If his land is of average quality, with fair luck he can safely count on one bale of cotton per acre, which rises from eighty to one hundred dollars per bale. The cultivation of this article must fall into the hands of the more intelligent and interested portion of the laboring population, and vast improvement in its culture and preparation for market have already been made.

It has proven itself at ten cents per pound a paying crop in the region of country extending from the Red river to the Rio Grande. Even in the highest portions of this State the extraordinary richness of the soil leads me to believe that this great staple commodity may be profitably cultivated. At any rate, we have territory enough to produce cotton sufficient to supply the enormous increasing demand from every quarter. This capital only awaits Anglo saxon energy and energy of which is not beginning to rapidly flow in a continued stream. Now that the institution of slavery no longer exists in Texas, and that "old prejudice" removed, the immigration to our State is unprecedented. The long trains daily arriving at Bremond, the present terminus of the Central R. R., and the long lines of wagons crossing Red river certainly eclipse anything of the kind ever witnessed in this quarter.

Now while thousands of people, deprived of work, and nearly destitute of bread, hang around the street corners of New York and discuss the momentous question of labor and want, while the miners of Pennsylvania and the artisans of Boston, exposed to humiliation and dependence upon the capitalist, and the working women of Lowell, assemble in thousands to plead for rescue from the necessity of degradation, Texas is receiving immigrants from the crowded shores of the Atlantic States and along the winding line of the great "Fiber of Waters" at about ten thousand per week, with a fair prospect of increase the coming fall.
This enormous influx, if maintained throughout the year, will place Texas in the front rank.
At this rate, there seems no limit to the expansion of numbers, power and wealth, that may be foreseen for the Lone Star.

With probably a million and a half already were an accurate account taken, it must be evident that should the ratio keep on as it now progresses, in ten years, we will more than see the aggregate tripled and then what will our importance and sway not be in the new world?
But while computing this grand advance of numbers, we are reminded that there are serious questions involved therein. How shall all the people live and be fed, or how will our cities escape social outbreaks and convulsions?
This question may seem momentous and absorbing, but is easily answered. Our domain is vast. It is broad and rich enough to support them all, if properly distributed and cultivated.

This, then, proved, labor in Texas is in great demand and prices rule high; ordinary market readily command $25 per month specie and board. As I have already said land is abundant and cheap for all with regard to politics or local habitation. Then why will these thousands who could otherwise do so well and soon become independent, linger in these crowded cities, exhausting, rather than increasing their little surplus? It is to be deplored that they will lie dormant, in prison as it were, and not strike out and grasp the many advantages to be derived from them. This country possesses resources, which far surpass those of any other State, and she is in truth entitled to the appellation "Garden State." With her beautiful clear streams of pure water, unsurpassed fertility of soil and genial healthful climate, combined with an immense expanse of territory, she is destined to be the Empire State of this great Republic.

SENSIBLE ADVICE.—A Normal School Convention is in session at Cleveland, at which New York, and nearly all the States are represented. The whole subject of schools, scholars and teachers is being very thoroughly discussed, and the teachers themselves are being called to account for promoting certain deficiencies for which they are quite prone to hold the scholars responsible. The Superintendent of the Chicago public schools treated of the "human body as a study for the teacher," and among other things said:

He felt safe in saying that not one in five of the teachers in the United States has even an imperfect knowledge of the physical structure of his pupils and of the laws that govern its healthy action. A far less number had ever made the child's mental and moral nature a study. Body, mind and soul are delicate organizations at best. Capabilities easily destroyed are too often placed in ignorant and experienced hands. In school the children are often cramped into uncomfortable seats, or allowed to assume unhealthy postures. They are crowded into small and poorly ventilated rooms, or confined too long, and are injured in many other ways through the ignorance of school authorities. Of the health of teachers he said, it is the mother of all nuisances, that bane of many school rooms, a teacher's nerves are often his most ruinous pupils. Late hours, improper food and lazy habits, have furnished many occasions of discipline to pupils, while a howl early in the morning by one whose hours of sleep began at the proper time and whose dreams were undisturbed by indigestible food, has often saved the use of the birch in school hours.
